Excerpt from An Examination of Certain Recent Assaults on Physical Science But how does Dr. Dabney apply all this to the subject of his discourse? In a most remarkable way - by nicknaming physical science vain, deceitful philosophy. Although the false and deadly philosophy which is spoken of by St. Paul confessedly had no observed facts for its foundation, while physical science is based exclusively upon facts which any one may verify for himself; and although in the former case the fantastic guesses were woven into a fanciful and visionary scheme in defiance of reason, while physical science arranges its facts and deduces inferences from them in accordance with intuitive principles which are believed by all - yet Dr. Dabney warns us against physical science because the philosophy which was seeking to spoil the Colossians was vain and deceitful. It is as if one should prove to us the deceitful and deadly character of the Christian religion by depicting to us the abominable rites of some ancient Pagan religion, or the absurdities and atrocities of false religions which still enslave myriads of our race in the dark places in the earth. It is even worse; for there is no religion so utterly false that it does not contain some truths taught by Christianity; but physical science has not one single point in common with that with which Dr. Dabney classes it. He could not possibly have made a greater mistake than he has done in regarding as similar two things which are so utterly unlike.
